During the autumn of 1812, I was Algiers, and, one pleasant day, I joined a party of French officers in a jaunt into the back country. The distauce from the coast—or from the city of Algiers to the northernmost sweep of the Atlas mountains, is not quite twenty miles, and thitherward we took our way to see the sights. My particular object was to sec the district whence came the cines is supply of gum Arabic. On the first night ut, we found quarters with a Peola peasant, whose household was far from repulsive or impleasant. On the following morning, we found ur host preparing to go to the forest. He said he was going to examine hi nonkey tra s. Three of us went with nim; and the first trap we visited held a nonkey, whose facial contortions and sharp chattering and screaming, as we approached, were trightful. And what o you suppose that trap was? How vas the monkey caught? I will tell you. Attached to a limb of an acacia tree y a strong cord was a gourd, the shell f which was tough, strong and intact, aving a small round hole on one side. Within this gourd the peasant had placed a small quantity of huts, of which the nonkey is very fond. Well, the monkey iscovers the gourd in a strange position and he investigates.
